"THE PILGRIM STRANGER."

A woman tropical, intense
In thought and act, in soul and sense,
She blended in a like degree
The vixen and the devotee,
Revealing with each freak or feint
The temper of Petruchio's Kate,
The raptures of Siena's saint.
Her tapering hand and rounded wrist
Had facile power to form a fist;
The warm, dark languish of her eyes
Was never safe from wrath's surprise.
Brows saintly calm and lips devout
Knew every change of scowl and pout;
And the sweet voice had notes more high
And shrill for social battle-cry.

—John G. Whittier.

HARRIET LIVERMORE.

Harriet Livermore was daughter of Hon. Edward St. Loe and Mehitable (Harris) Livermore, and was born in Concord, N. H., April 14, 1788. The father studied law with Chief-justice Parsons in Newburyport, Mass., settled in practice in Concord, N. H., removing to Lowell, Mass., and served for several terms in congress.

Though her mother died when Harriet was only five years old, she fondly cherished her memory and bitterly lamented her death. She disliked her sweet-tempered step-mother so much that at the age of eight she was placed in a boarding school in Haverhill, Mass., where through the intimacy between her father and Judge Minot she entered the best society. She subsequently lived on Spring street in Newburyport, and attended the Byfield Female Seminary, and later Atkinson Academy.

From her cradle days she was never at ease, because of her impetuosity, and her disposition was never under control. She was naturally generous, and was ever ready to confess her faults and seek forgiveness.

In her young womanhood, she was fine looking, of medium height and unusually graceful, and had a fair complexion, hair a yard and a quarter in length, black and glossy, and large black eyes, shaded by heavy brows.

While attending the academy at Atkinson she became acquainted and fascinated with a promising and scholarly young man, Moses H. Elliott, whose home was the old "Garrison house" in East Haverhill. Their acquaintance was continued after their academy days were over; and she, probably for the purpose of being near him, in 1811 commenced to teach school, first, for one or two terms, in a private house, and then for several terms in the old brown district schoolhouse at East Haverhill, which was close to young Elliott's home.

He became a physician and began to practise at Portsmouth, N. H. It was expected that marriage would follow their intimacy, but both families opposed it on account of her incompatibility of temper; and at Doctor Elliott's request the acquaintance was broken. The spirit of Miss Livermore brooked no opposition, and vainly she strove to remove the prejudices of Doctor Elliott's family, even on her knees at his mother's feet. How much each suffered by the separation, and how far it affected their subsequent lives cannot be known.

Doctor Elliott soon after, near the close of the War of 1812, secured the appointment of surgeon in the United States army, and went south upon his duties. The entire night before his departure he paced his room, and showed the intensity of his feelings to those ancient walls alone. To the scenes that would stir olden memories he never returned; and at the hospital at Pensacola, Florida, he fell a victim to yellow fever Sept. 22, 1822, at the age of thirty-three. His remains were brought north about thirty years afterward, and interred in the Greenwood cemetery, at East Haverhill, near his old home. A plain stone marks the spot.

When news came of her lover's death in the distant Southland, with a spirit apparently of revenge, Miss Livermore said to his father, "If your family had not opposed our union, this bitter grief would have been spared them, for he would not have exiled himself thus and died among strangers." Her words were probably true, as it has been thought if they had married each other Doctor Elliott's gentle spirit would have subdued and softened her passionate nature. The separation gradually caused her to become moody and eccentric.

When Miss Livermore began to teach at East Haverhill, at the age of twenty-three, she professed conversion, and in 1818 joined the congregational church, though she had been in the Episcopal fellowship since she was fourteen. In 1825, she was transferred to the Baptist church, which she soon discarded. The poet Whittier says, "She was frequently at our house, and at one time had an idea of becoming a member of the Society of Friends, but an unlucky outburst of rage, resulting in a blow, at a Friend's house in Amesbury, did not encourage us to seek her membership. She was naturally religious, and I have no doubt tried hard to overcome her naturally passionate disposition."

When she taught school at East Haverhill, John G. Whittier was a boy of six or seven, and it is she that he describes in "Snow Bound," in that portion of the poem commencing,

> "Another guest that winter night
> Flashed back from lustrous eyes the light."

The very devout manner in which she taught her pupils to repeat the Lord's prayer and the one hundred and nineteenth psalm in concert was never forgotten by them. With closed eyes, and in a voice as soft and low as that of an angel she impressed the recitation upon them. But woe to the unfortunate scholar who incurred her displeasure. Her rage was so sudden and intense, and her blows so severe, the return to the next session was most dreaded. Because of her accomplishments and social position she was continued as teacher. She taught her girl pupils needle-work and embroidery of her own exquisite designs, and specimens of her and their work are still extant in the families of some of her scholars.

As early as 1824, Miss Livermore spoke publicly in the old schoolhouse in which she had taught at East Haverhill, and at Newton, N. H., and surrounding towns. In 1825, at the age of thirty-seven, she abandoned teaching, and entered upon her life work as an evangelist, assuming the name of "The Pilgrim Stranger." She spoke in schoolhouses, churches, and in any room she could obtain, or in the open air. At one time, in Philadelphia, she addressed a large number of sailors upon a wharf. She travelled by stage, private conveyance, or on foot. "Twice, for want of money," she wrote, "I walked until my feet were festered, and my whole frame entirely exhausted." She was pleasing as a speaker, and attracted large crowds. The late Governor Briggs said that she was the sweetest singer he ever knew, and that she could be distinctly heard by a thousand persons. Whittier, also, says, "She was quite earnest and eloquent."

When her father was in congress, Miss Livermore was with him in Washington, and entered into the society to which his position admitted her. In January, 1827, she addressed the assembled congress in the hall of representatives on religion, the president and secretary being present. She is said to have sung melodiously, her softest notes filling the vast room. Her preaching was also thought to have been eloquent and effective. She was the first woman that ever publicly spoke within the congressional halls. Subsequently she spoke there in three other administrations.

She was a firm Adventist, and hoped to die on Mt. Zion. This was because of her strange notion in regard to the fulfilment of the prophecy mentioned in Rev. xi. 3-13. She believed that she was to be one of the two witnesses who were to be slain in the Holy City, lie unburied in the streets three days and a half, and then stand on their feet alive, etc. With the realization of this prophecy in view she secretly visited Palestine, where she became known as the American "Mejunneh" and "the Yankee crazy woman." Subsequently she visited the Holy Land three times, spending in all sixteen years of her life in that region, in Egypt, and in various other foreign countries, crossing the Atlantic ten times.

At one time she climbed Mt. Libanus, and visited Lady Hester Stanhope, the famous "Queen of Lebanon," whom Miss Livermore resembled. Lady Hester pointed out to her from among her fine steeds two beautiful horses, saying, "One the Great King, when he come, will ride, and the other I will ride in company with Him." In response, Miss Livermore gave a most emphatic "No! The Great King will ride this horse, and it is I, as his bride, who will ride upon the other, at His second coming."

A Turk once offered her his arm as escort, which she refused with scorn, saying, "Christians have no dealings with the Turks."

In May, 1832, Miss Livermore went to the Far West, and spent a year, principally among the Indians at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, travelling six thousand miles, most of the distance through the wilderness. She wished to be of service to them, as she felt that they were of Israel, and would yet be restored to Jerusalem, and intended to spend her life among them, but as the Commissioners on Indian Affairs objected, her project had to be abandoned.

John G. Whittier says that in 1838, Miss Livermore staid at his boarding place in Philadelphia for several days, and he assisted her in securing an audience to a lecture on her foreign travels, which netted her about one hundred and fifty dollars.

Miss Livermore was also prominent as a writer, having published nearly a score of books, most of which were of a religious character. Among them were volumes of sermons and hymns which were at one time much used among the Dunkers in Pennsylvania. Her religious novel, entitled, "A Wreath from Jessamine Lawn," is fascinating, and many of her poems indicate genius.

She spent some time among the Dunkers, and was regarded by them as a gifted Christian minister. Her labors were blessed everywhere. Her first sermon in Philadelphia was delivered in a Dunkers' church, and it was the means of the conversion of Sarah Righter, who subsequently married Rev. Thomas Major, and for forty years preached the gospel.

On returning, in 1862, from her last voyage to Jerusalem, she was for several years supported by her relatives and friends, to whom she became so troublesome that, Nov. 13, 1867, her nephew placed her in the Blockley almshouse in West Philadelphia, where she died four months later, March 30, 1868, at the age of eighty. Property had been left for her in trust, but by unfortunate investments the trustee had lost it.

Miss Livermore's friend, Mrs. Margaret F. Worrell, caused her remains to be brought to her own home in Germantown, and, after a simple service by a few of the friends of other days, had them interred in her lot in the Dunkers' cemetery. The grave is unmarked, but neighbors point out the mound under which "The Pilgrim Stranger" awaits the coming of her King.

Her last days were marked by the same traits of character that had been prominent in her earlier years, but she had grown impatient with age. Her virtues, it is said, far exceeded her faults, and in spite of her eccentricities she accomplished much good in the service of her Master.

She was indeed a singular and remarkable woman, more pitiable than censurable. No one knows what fierce and unsuccessful struggles she had to overcome the violence of her peculiar disposition. A writer has said, "Half insane, half weird, and wholly wilful, a virago and a vixen in one person, she was, in a sense the poet never thought of,

> 'Commixture strange of heaven, earth, hell,' without the first of the three elements."

The frontispiece represents her face as she appeared in her prime.

SALEM.

"Rife, crown'd with Light, imperial SALEM rife."
POPE.

WHERE balmy Odours o'er the Meadows ſtray'd,
And bending Willows form'd a quivering Shade;
Where the great Monarch of the woody Train,
Rear'd high his Head, and overlooked the Plain;
And where the Elm, in branching Pride diſplay'd
The ſacred Shelter of its rural Shade;
Imperial Salem ſtretches o'er the Land:
Her Sons, ariſe at Liberty's Command,
Superior ſhine, in peaceful Robes array'd,
And ſcorn the glittering Pomp of ſervile Pride,
By little Arts, malevolent to gain;
But bravely loyal, all their Rights maintain.

For me, I'll ne'er forget th' impartial Themes,
The friendly Lays, which honeſt Merit claims:
I'll haunt thy Fields, I'll ſing thy flowery Plains,
And court the Friendſhip of thy generous Swains.
Thou bleſs'd of Heav'n, ſecure amidſt the Jars,
Of civil Factions, and religious Wars;
O may no jealous Power --- thy Peace deſtroy,
Or ſhake the Baſis of thy ſpreading Joy;
No envious Neighbour ſtain thy virtuous Name,
Or blaſt the Glory of thy riſing Fame.

So when immortal Rome, by Trojans rear'd,
In towering Pomp, and Elegance appear'd;
Proud Carthage ſaw, grew jealous at the Sight,
Pour'd forth her Sons, and rous'd them to the Fight;
Each Breaſt was fir'd, each Hero ſought his Arms,
And all was Fury, Terror, and Alarms.
But when the Genius of that ſacred Throne,
Where Liberty divine triumphant ſhone,
With her own Brutus, at Philippi ſaw,
Exulting Vice ſubvert great Virtue's Law,
She fled, indignant, to Britannia's Plains,
There fix'd the Center of her wide Domains.
From thence ſhe wing'd her Flight o'er Neptune's Sway,
And as ſhe radiant ſkim'd the watery Way,
In Murmurs whiſper'd to the ſighing Gale,
"Oh bear me far to Eſſex's fruitful Vale,
"There let my Sons the Pomp of Vice deſpiſe,
"There, crown'd with Light, imperial SALEM riſe."

318. Who was James Offin who was witness to a deed in Salisbury, Mass., in 1660. Essex Antiquarian, volume III., page 10. E. D. B.
Boston.

319. Wanted, ancestry of Catherine Layton, born, 1658, married June 26, 1681, Maj. John Whipple of Ipswich.
E. D. B.

320. Wanted, ancestry of Mary Jones who married Capt. Thomas Woodbridge June 4, 1672. She married, secondly, Joseph Coker. Her mother was the wife of Capt. Paul White of Newbury, Mass.
E. D. B.

ANSWERS.

165. Jonathan Wilson, who married Mary Beans, both of Salem, Sept. 17, 1766 (having been published about eleven months before) was evidently son of Isaac Wilson of Danvers (probably of that part of Danvers which is now Peabody), wheelwright, who died in the winter of 1802-3. Jonathan was a blacksmith and lived in Danvers in 1784. Jonathan Wilson of Windham, Cumberland county, husbandman, wife Mary, in 1796, is probably the same person as the above.—Ed.

170. The mention of "James Wales" in the Antiquarian, volume I, page 21, was probably intended by the scrivener who drew the deed for the possessive form of James Wall, who then lived in Hampton; and died in 1659. He had two wives, Mary being the name of the second; and two daughters by each wife, Elizabeth and Sarah by the first, and Mary and Hannah by the second.—Ed.

BRADFORD INSCRIPTIONS.

ANCIENT BURYING GROUND.

THIS old burying ground was used in the first settlement of the town, and remained the only cemetery until 1723, when the East parish (now the town of Groveland) burial ground was opened. The oldest stone now standing and decipherable bears date of 1681, being that of Mrs. Susannah Simes. The following are all the inscriptions that were there a few years ago bearing dates prior to 1800.

FROM PEGGY BLIGH'S VOYAGE.

Horseback over a blind, rough road,
Or as part of a jolting wagon-load
Of garden-produce or household goods,
Crossing the fords, half lost in the woods,
By wolves and red-skins frighted all day,
And the roar of lions, some histories say.

Lucy Larcom.

EARLY HIGHWAYS.

The water was the original highway of our region. Roads were not constructed for some years after the first settlers came, and they had to be contented with Indian ways of conveyance. The forest was dense with few paths, and rivers, ponds and ocean remained unobstructed to water craft. For many years the better and favorite way to Boston and between settlements along the ocean and rivers was by water; and indeed it has remained an easy and favorite passage to a great extent to the present time.

Trails, marked by blazed trees, were the original land ways; and those wishing to go over land had to walk, for some years, dignitary and plebian alike. It took four days to make the trip between Salem and Boston, when Winthrop first came; and the next Sunday after the visit of a party to Boston there was posted in the meeting-house in Salem a vote of thanks for their safe guidance and return.

Until bridges were built streams had to be forded or a crossing effected by boat. This led to ferries being early established and bridges built. Carr's ferry, over the Merrimack river, at Carr's island, was authorized as early as 1639; and the town bridge at what is now known as Blubber Hollow on Boston street in Salem was built in 1640.

Horses were soon introduced and trails had to be made fit for bridle paths. In 1646 the town of Salem ordered to be made between the town and Jeffries Creek (now Manchester) "such a way as a man may travel on horseback or drive cattle."

Only one of the inventories of estates of deceased persons filed in this county before 1646 mentions horses. That is the inventory of the estate of Samuel Smith of Wenham (then called Enon), who died in 1642. It mentions a mare and colt. In the inventories of Robert Pease and John Talbey, both taken in 1644, and both being Salem estates, canoes are mentioned. In none of them is any other vehicle named.

The change from trails to bridle-paths only occasioned the removing of rocks and trees. Too many stumps and rocks remained to trip the unwary animal.

Later came sleds and wagons. Then bridle-paths had to be widened, and the surface of the ground put into better condition.

The early road ways, except in the principal streets of the villages, ran through private lands, not being bordered by fences, and the division fences and walls between the various lots ran across the roads, making necessary the maintenance of bars or gates at the roadways. Public highways encumbered by gates and bars have existed in this county until recent times.

During the winter season snow was neither removed nor trodden down, even in the large towns until near the close of the eighteenth century.

Paths and roads were first made to connect the scattered houses of the settlers, and therefore there were no direct roads between settlements for many years. With the straightening of these roads and the construction of direct highways most of the old roads have been abandoned; and our county is interlaced with obsolete ways. Many of these are now lanes, and more can be traced in pastures and woods. The parallel walls of stone, crooked and choked with barberry and bramble, sometimes arched with grand old elms, and ancient garden flowers and shrubs by half-filled cellars and wells show where some of the early highways traced their course.

PART OF SALEM IN 1700. NO 6.

THE ESSEX ANTIQUARIAN.

VOL. V. SALEM, MASS., MARCH, 1901. NO. 3.

PART OF SALEM IN 1700. NO. 6.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

THE frontispiece is a map of that section of Salem which is bounded by Flint, Broad, Essex and Jackson streets. It is based on actual surveys and title deeds, and is drawn on a scale of two hundred feet to an inch. It shows the location of all houses that were standing in 1700. The brace marked "a" shows where South Pine street begins; the braces marked "b" where Warren street runs; those marked "c" where Warren street court runs; and "d" where Jackson street runs. The letters "f" "f" show the present eastern side of the upper end of Essex street.

Essex street was first called a street as early as 1659; ye great street leading through the town, 1713; the main street, 1722; and Essex street, 1796. The upper end of Essex street was originally Brickkiln lane, which was called a lane in 1694; brickkiln lane, 1721; way leading into the great pasture, 1744; Northerly way leading into the great pasture, 1787. It was widened on the eastern side before 1805, probably when the turnpike was constructed, making it as at present. In 1804, the Salem turnpike was laid out from Brickkiln lane, and it finally came into the possession of the city, being called the Salem turnpike. Its name was changed to Highland avenue in 1875.

Flint street was first called a lane in 1694; a street, 1713; a lane or highway, 1721; lane from the main street to Marblehead, 1786; and Flint street, 1801.

Warren street was laid out by the owners of land over which it passed Dec. 19, 1804*, and has always been so called.

*Essex Registry of Deeds, book 175, leaf 204.

Pine street was laid out by the owners of land over which it passed, twenty-eight feet wide, Jan. 1, 1806,* and was known by that name, being latterly called South Pine street.

The only way to get into or out of the central part of Salem by land in the earliest days was by way of Broad street. It was a highway as far as shown on the map, the rest of the way running over common lands. Broad street itself was first called a highway in 1701; and Broad street, 1801. The private way was called Pasture street as early as 1797, and Broad street in 1831, the gate probably having been removed to a point near the present end of the street. The city accepted this part as a highway in 1870, and since then it has been a legal portion of Broad street.

Jackson street was laid out over the Great pasture lands for a highway, and accepted as such in 1877.

In the sketches that follow, after 1700, titles and deeds referred to pertain to the houses and land under and adjoining, but not always to the whole lot, the design being, after 1700, to give the history of the houses then standing principally.

The Common Pasture. This was common land of the proprietors or commoners from the first settlement. This part of the common lands became the estate of that portion of the proprietors who became incorporated as the Great Pasture corporation in 1724. The two projecting portions of the pasture shown on the map were the "pens," at the extremities of which were the gates that admitted the cattle. The one leading toward Essex street was the northern entrance, and the other, the southern. To these two gates the owners of cattle drove them in the morning and turned them over to the care of the cow-herd, and at night there received them at his hand. The northern entrance remained until some years after the turnpike was a highway, and was then sold to individuals. The southern entrance was a private way as early as 1797, the gate having been removed to what is now the head of Broad street, and in 1870 it became a highway—an extension of Broad street.

Col. John Hathorne Farm. This farm was probably granted by the town to Maj. William Hathorne at a very early date (before 1635). A house was standing on the farm in 1646 and 1661, but was gone before the decease of Major Hathorne, which occurred in 1681. He devised the farm to his son, Col. John Hathorne, who died possessed of it May 10, 1717.

Benjamin and William Pickering House. This lot was early in the possession of Townsend Bishop. His agents, Robert Moulton and Michael Shafflyn, conveyed to Richard Adams "one ould howse wth one acre of land w^th^in the Comon feild and about an acre and an halfe of land next to the Comon inclosed by ytselfe," for three pounds, ten shillings, 27 : 3 : 1646*. On the same day, they also conveyed, for the same amount of money, "the new messuadge or dwelling house of the said m^r^ Bishope standing by the Rocks nere Captane Hathornes house," to Ralph Fogg of Salem.† The house had probably been erected the preceding year. This lot also came into the possession of Mr. Adams. He was of Salem, mason, April 30, 1679, when, for one hundred and fifty pounds, he conveyed to Lt. John Pickering of Salem, yeoman, this house (the old house being gone) and lot of four or five acres, consisting of pasture, mowing, orchard and garden, "at the western end of the town over against Major Hathorne's"*. Mr. Pickering died possessed of the lot and house May 5, 1694, having devised the estate to his sons Benjamin and William. They made a partition of the estate July 26, 1701, Benjamin having the western part of the house and lot and north leanto, and William, the eastern part.

Benjamin Pickering died possessed of the western half of the house and lot between 1701 and 1734, and at the latter date his widow Jane Pickering was living in his end of the house. She died possessed of it in 1749-50, having devised it to her son Joseph Pickering. Joseph lived in the house, and died in 1790, having devised the estate to his son William and his grandson Joseph Pickering (son of his deceased son Joseph). William Pickering was a mariner, living in Salem, and released his interest in the premises to his co-tenant, who was also a mariner of Salem, April 27, 1797.† Joseph conveyed the estate to William Pickering of Salem, mariner, June 26, 1828.§ William Pickering conveyed it to Samuel S. Williston of Salem, cabinet-maker, Jan. 21, 1830.§ Mr. Williston lived in his part of the house, and mortgaged it to William Micklefield of Salem, to bacconist, Dec. 12, 1831.‖ By foreclosure it became the mortgagee's. Mr. Micklefield died possessed of his part of the house and lot Aug. 28, 1840; and the trustee under his will, together with Mr. Williston, conveyed the estate to Jeremiah Mahoney and Jeremiah L. Ford, both of Salem, curriers, July 27, 1844.‡ Mr. Ford released his interest in the premises to Mr. Mahoney Sept. 18, 1850.¶ Mr. Mahoney became insolvent, and his assignees conveyed it to Patrick Ganley of Salem Aug. 5, 1858. On the same day, Mr. Ganley reconveyed the estate to the

Capt. William Pickering died possessed of the eastern part of the house and lot, and his executrix conveyed it to his nephew, Edward Pickering (son of Benjamin Pickering who owned the other half) of Salem, mariner, Sept. 4, 1724.§ Edward Pickering lived there, and was a husbandman. He conveyed his portion of the house and lot to his brother William Pickering of Salem, cordwainer, Feb. 25, 1734.‖ William Pickering, then of Salem, shoreman, conveyed it to his brother Joseph Pickering of Salem, fisherman, April 12, 1755.‡ Joseph Pickering conveyed the estate to his sons James and William Sept. 16, 1761.¶ They made a division of their part of the house and land April 23, 1782. James was a mariner, and sold his part of the house to Henry Day of Salem, mariner, Aug. 22, 1803,†† and William released his part to Mr. Day May 12, 1804.* Mr. Day conveyed the premises (his part of the house being then occupied by Aaron Francis) to Samuel and Isaac Very, both of Salem, merchants, Aug. 23, 1803.† Lydia and Margaret Very both of Salem, respectively widows of Samuel (died in 1824) and Isaac (died in 1805) Very, conveyed the premises to Samuel Phipps of Salem, laborer, Nov. 1, 1826.§ Mr. Phipps conveyed the estate, which he describes as the "easterly part of a certain old dwelling house" and land to Joseph Phipps of Salem, laborer, April 29, 1830.‖ Joseph Phipps died in August, 1844, possessed of the estate, and the trustee under his will conveyed it to his heirs June 1, 1864.‡ Joseph Phipps, apparently one of the heirs, became insolvent, and he and his assignee conveyed his interest in the estate to Parker Burnham of Beverly July 1, 1864.¶ Mr. Burnham, with Henry Phipps, both of Beverly, and Thomas R. others of the heirs, conveyed it to John Looney of Salem July 11, 1864.*

So John Looney owned the eastern half, and William Looney the western half of the house when it was burned between two and three o'clock on the afternoon of Sept. 16, 1865. William Looney and his son-in-law Coakley were then living in his part, and the other half was occupied by the widow Wood and a Mr. Redmond and family. The walls, being lined with brick, remained standing until the following spring. The engraving of the house herewith given has been copied from the drawing made of it by John Robinson March 1, 1866, representing it as it appeared just before the fire.

Edward Flint and Thomas Flint Lots and David Flint House. These three lots were generally known, in the last quarter of the seventeenth century as Goldthwaite's and Putnam's lots. Thomas James of Salem, husbandman, owned one acre of this land, adjoining "to goodman Adams land near the brick kill," in 1652, when he conveyed it to William Flint.† Henry Kenney of Salem, husbandman, owned three acres of the southwestern end of the Edward Flint and Thomas Flint lots, with a dwelling house thereon, Feb. 28, 1659, when he conveyed the estate to William Flint of Salem,§ who already owned the remainder of the lots and the David Flint lot. William Flint died 2 : 2 : 1673, possessed of the lots, having devised them in his will to his sons Edward and Thomas. Dec. 3, 1694, they divided the premises, the Thomas Flint lot being assigned to Thomas, and the others to Edward Flint.‖ Thomas Flint owned his lot until his decease, about 1719. Edward died possessed of his lot in 1711, having devised to his son David the lot "where his house stands." David was married in January, 1700, and he probably built his house on this corner about that time. He was a fellmonger, and died in 1736, possessed of the estate. His executors conveyed the western half of the "mansion house" and lot to James Odell of Salem, shoreman, July 9, 1739.* Mr. Odell died, and the estate descended to his son James, who conveyed it to Stephen Fogg of Salem, trader, June 21, 1826.†

The eastern half of the house and lot were conveyed by the executors of David Flint to Thomas Metcalf of Salem, fisherman, the deceased's son-in-law, June 15, 1739.§ Mr. Metcalf died in 1749, and after the decease of his widow Ruth, in 1766, it descended to their only son Joseph. July 27, 1786, Joseph Metcalf conveyed his part of the house and lot to Jeduthun Upton of Salem, merchant.‖ Mr. Upton conveyed one-half of his interest to Dudley Porter, jr., of Haverhill, merchant, Jan. 24, 1807.‡ Mr. Upton and Mr. Porter conveyed their part of the house and lot to John and Nathaniel Sleeper, both of Salem, laborers, June 25, 1807.¶ The Sleepers conveyed the estate to Peter E. Webster and John Hale, both of Salem, traders, July 26, 1815; and Mr. Hale conveyed his interest in the property to Stephen Fogg Aug. 28, 1815.†† Mr. Webster released his interest to Mr. Fogg Jan. 12, 1818.§§

Thus Mr. Fogg came into possession of the entire house and lot. The ancient house had been occupied as a dwelling and a grocery, the business having been carried on from about 1806 to about 1810 by the Sleepers, who owned the eastern part. They did a large business in West India and other foreign goods. Crowds of teams came to this store from New Hampshire and Vermont with country produce, which they exchanged for other commodities.

Mr. Fogg took the old house down in 1826, and erected the present brick store, adding the residence portion fourteen years later. He continued the trade many years, and died April 25, 1859.*

BADCOCK FAMILY.

This name was sometimes spelled Babcock in early Essex county records, and is now generally so spelled.

WILLIAM BADCOCK[1] lived in Beverly in 1723, 1724, 1725 and 1730, bought a house and land in Manchester in 1724, and subsequently removed thither. He was a husbandman; and married Miriam (Pears?) in or before 1723. He was adjudicated non compos mentis in 1764, and died in 1766, administration being granted on his estate April 8, 1766.

RESIDENCE OF GEORGE L. PEABODY.

*The extreme southern end of this lot, marked "David Flint" on the map, was owned by John Kimball, in 1807, when he built a house upon it. He conveyed it the next year to Nathaniel Osgood; and in 1818 Mr. Osgood sold it to Stephen Fogg. On the lot adjoining this house on the south was a store built by Stephen Thayer, the owner of the land, in 1808. He conveyed it to William Wait Oliver the next year; and Mr. Oliver carried on his salt trade here until 1821, when he sold the store and lot to Stephen Fogg. Mr. Fogg moved the store about two feet, annexing it to his house, in which he resided. The engraving shows the house with the store part attached (being the end having the gable toward the street). After Mr. Fogg's death in 1859, the place came into the possession of George L. Peabody, who resides there. This house is on Flint street, directly opposite the head of Chestnut street.

SOME ESSEX COUNTY INDIANS.

ANDREW, known also by the name of Pooky John, lived in the vicinity of Amesbury upon the Merrimac in 1677. He belonged to a small party of about twenty, who made daily inroads upon the inhabitants of that quarter.†

BLACK-WILLIAM, called also Manatahqua, was sachem of Saugus, now Lynn, and vicinity about 1630. His family lived in Swampscott, and was also a sagamore, but probably was dead before the English came.* William Wood, the traveller, in 1633, in his New England Prospect, thus notices William as possessing Nahant: "One Black-william, an Indian Duke, out of his generosity gave this place in general to the plantation of Saugus, so that no other can appropriate it to himself." He was a great friend to the whites, but his friendshp was repaid, as was that of many others of that and even later times. There was a man by the name of Walter Bagnall, "a wicked fellow," who had much wronged the Indians,§ and was killed near the mouth of the Saco river, probably by some of those whom he had defrauded. This was in October, 1631. As some vessels were upon the eastern coast in search of pirates, in January, 1633, they put in at Richman's island, where they fell in with Black-William. This was the place where Bagnall had been killed about two years before, but whether he had anything to do with it does not appear, and even his murderers did not pretend that he was in anyway implicated, but out of revenge for Bagnall's death, they hanged Black-William.§ On the contrary it was particularly mentioned‖ that Bagnall was killed by Squidrayset and his men, some Indians belonging to that part of the country. It is believed that this chief married a daughter of Passaconaway.*

JAMES, sagamore of Saugus, now Lynn, whose native name was Montowampate,† was brother of John, sagamore of Winisimet. He died in 1633, of the smallpox, "with most of his people. It is said that these two promised if ever they recovered to live with the English, and serve their God."§ The histories of those times give a melancholy picture of the distresses caused by the smallpox among the "wretched natives." "There are," says Mather, "some old planters surviving to this day, who helped to bury the dead Indians; even whole families of them were all dead at once. In one of the wigwams they found a poor infant sucking at the breast of the dead mother."‖ The same author observes that before the disease began, the Indians had begun to quarrel with the English about the bounds of their lands, "but God ended the controversy by sending the smallpox among the Indians at Saugus, who were before that time exceedingly numerous."‡ MASCONOMO, sachem of Agawam, since called Cape Ann. When the fleet which brought over the colony that settled Boston, in 1630, anchored near there he welcomed them to his shores, and spent some time on board one of the ships.¶ We hear no more of him until 1643, when, at the court held in Boston, "Cutshamekin and Squaw-sachem, Masconomo, Nashacowam and Wassamagin, two sachems near the great hill to the west called Wachusett, came into the court, and according to their former tender to the governor desired to be received under our protection and government upon the same terms that Pumham and Sacanonoco were. So we caused them to understand the articles, and all the ten commandments of God, and they freely assenting to all, they were solemnly received, and then presented the court with twenty-six fathom of wampum, and the court gave each of them a coat of two yards of cloth, and their dinner and to them and their men every one of them a cup of sac at their departure, so they took leave and went away very joyful."* Agawam, in Ipswich, was his place of residence, and his remains were interred on Sagamore hill in what is now the town of Hamilton. His squaw survived him for some time, having a piece of land that she could not dispose of, or that none were allowed to purchase.†

THE OLD SHOEMAKER'S SHOP.

THE SHOEMAKERS.

Rap, rap! upon the well-worn stone,
  How falls the polished hammer!
Rap, rap! the measured sound has grown
  A quick and merry clamor.
Now shape the sole! now deftly curl
  The glossy vamp around it,
And bless the while the bright-eyed girl
  Whose gentle fingers bound it!

Rap, rap!—your stout and bluff brogan,
  With footsteps slow and weary,
May wander where the sky's blue span
  Shuts down upon the prairie.
On Beauty's foot your slippers glance,
  By Saratoga's fountains,
Or twinkle down the summer dance
  Beneath the Crystal Mountains?

John G. Whittier.

SHOEMAKING.

Shoemakers began to ply their trade in this county in its first settlement. They were generally called cordwainers or cordwinders, though those terms are not sufficiently descriptive of their occupation, as a cordwainer was one who sewed leather, but included the making of breeches and other articles of clothing made of leather.

The journeymen shoemakers, and most of them were journeymen in the early days, travelled from house to house, and from village to village, and stopped in a family long enough to make up a year's supply of footwear. His habits were similar to those of the weaver and tailor, and he worked in the house and boarded with the family while he remained.

From the hide of the cow or ox that the farmer had killed for a supply of beef, which had been turned into leather by the tanner, the shoemaker shod the family, fitting the boots and shoes to each foot. Sizes, we dare say, were unknown in those earlier days.

About the middle of the eighteenth century many of the farmers, from sides of leather tanned from the hides of their own animals, and from leather they had purchased, spent their dull winters in making shoes, the wives and daughters doing the binding and closing, and the sons helping with the sewing and in pegging after pegs began to be used. Some worked by the fireplace in the living room of the house, but generally a small building was built near the house in which the men worked. These little shops were scattered all through Essex county, and some are still to be seen in the country. The outside view of one of these shops, and they were nearly all of the same size and style, is shown on the preceding page. They measured about ten by twelve feet. The inside view is given in the accompanying engraving. The neighbors frequently dropped in, and discussions in politics and all current topics often became animated. Gossip found here its readiest promoters.

When the winter's work was done, or the leather was all made up, the farmer carried his shoes to some trade centre and sold or bartered them.

Later, some of the men in towns became manufacturers. That is, they had a shop in which they stored their hides and stock and the manufactured goods. There they cut the stock,—soles, vamps, quarters, counters, tongues, lifts, welts and rands: but the boots and shoes were made in other places. The makers came and took away the stock, returning the finished goods, being paid for their labor by the pair. It is said that the first shop of this kind was in Danvers, being that of Zerubbabel Porter. His business was established in 1786, and he made heavy brogans for the wear of Southern slaves. The frontispiece is a view of this shop.*

INSIDE THE OLD SHOEMAKER'S SHOP.

About 1812, pegs, and a score of years later the pegging machine, were invented, and then the workmen were consolidated. Gangs did the work. Instead of one man making the whole of each shoe, each man did a part only, one lasting, another pegging, and so on. The small shops were gradually abandoned, and the work was done, from the cutting of the stock to the packing for the market, in one place. Eventually the business congregated, forming such shoe centres as Haverhill and Lynn.

Lynn has been noted for its shoes since its early days, no other town in the county showing so many men of this trade, according to the county records. The earliest shoemakers there were Philip Kertland and Edmund Bridges, who came as early as 1635. In 1767 eighty thousand pairs of shoes were made there, and in 1770 Lynn-made shoes were advertised in London.

The journeyman shoemaker of the early day, and the later shoe shop, which had more to do in shaping the affairs of the region than we know, long since became a matter of history only.

ANSWERS.

163. I have lately come into possession of an old Bible belonging to my great-great-grandfather, Joseph Lamson of Exeter, N. H., and in the family record contained in it is this: "On Aprill 29th 1769, was married Joseph Lamson, only son of Joseph Lamson of Exeter, weaver, to Rachael Sanborn, Daughter of Capt Caleb Sanborn of hampton falls, Joyner." This Joseph Lamson, sr., married Pernal Giddings, daughter of Zebulon and Deborah (Webster) Giddings of Exeter, N. H., Sept. 7, 1747. Whose son was this Joseph Lamson, sr.? His will is dated Exeter, March 24, 1802, and probated May 4, 1802.—A. H. Lamson, Elkins, N. H.

193. Samuel Cook of Salem had a daughter Mary baptized there April 18, 1708. She may have been the wife of Jasper Needham.—Ed.

194. Deborah, wife of Jeremiah Meacham, was the ninth child of John Brown, born 1631, married Esther Makepeace of Boston April 24, 1655. Deborah was born in 1673. Mr. Brown's will, dated at Watertown Nov. 20, 1697, says that he was late of Falmouth, and mentions wife Hester, daughter Deborah Meacham, etc.—Ed.

THE OLD TOWN PUMP.

Take not away the old town pump,
  But bid it adorn the place where it stands!
A graceful structure instead of a stump
  Of an upright post with its awkward hands.
    Take not away the old town pump.

We should miss the picture it gives the street,
  The oxen, the horses, the loads of hay,
The "give me to drink," the friends that greet,
  The weary trav'lers, the children at play.
    Take not away the old town pump.

Lydia L. A. Very.

THE TOWN PUMP.

The old public pumps of Salem were located on the principal thoroughfares, and, like sentinels, stood at their respective posts of duty through summer and winter, in sunshine and storm, ever extending their long arms ready to receive the hand of each and every person passing that way who might wish for refreshment from their cool fountains. The march of improvement many years ago removed them, and only the citizens on the downward incline of life remember how they looked.

The town undoubtedly furnished drinking places for horses and cattle very early in its history; but probably provided no means for travellers and citizens to slake their thirst at a public pump until after the Revolution. "The town pump" is first mentioned, as far as the investigations of the writer have revealed, in 1788, and was situated in the middle of the upper end of what is now Summer street, in front of the "Witchhouse." In that year, the land on the western corner of Summer and Essex streets was described as lying near "the town pump."

This pump was located where it would be passed by nearly every team entering and leaving the town, the only exceptions being the teams that might pass from North through Lynde street (that part of Federal street formerly known as Marlborough street, and that part of Bridge street back of the court houses not being in existence), and those coming from Marblehead and passing down Mill and Norman streets, instead of Summer street. Beverly bridge was not then constructed, and Beverly teams came by way of Danversport through North street. The travel from the west came down Essex street; and Summer street was the great road to Marblehead.

From the time of the Revolution for more than half a century the travel past this pump of heavy teams from New Hampshire and Vermont towns was enormous. They carried the foreign commodities from the warehouses here to the stores of those states, where they were sold to the consumers. Teams rarely passed, coming or going, without testing the quality of the water provided for them.

In 1806, was established a wood market on the south side of Essex street, westerly from Summer, a hay market on the westerly side of Summer street, and stands for dealers in country produce on the south side of Essex street next easterly of this pump. Thus it was, in 1806 and later, in the middle of the market of wood, hay and country produce.

The above cut is a copy of a drawing of this old pump made by E. A. Cabot in 1841. A few years later it was removed and a modern round, upright pump put in its place.

ANTRUM NOTE.

Thomas Antrum[1] (also spelled in Essex county records Antram, Antrim, Anthrop and Antrop) came from Southampton, England in the ship James, arriving in Boston June 3, 1635, and being called in the ship's clearance, a weaver, of Salisbury, Wiltshire. He settled in Salem, being granted land there in 1636, and he purchased of his "brother" Edmund Batter of Salem a farm in Brooksby in 1653. He probably married Jane, a sister of Edmund Batter, in or before 1637, as Thomas and Jane Antrum were members of the Salem church in 1637. He was made a freeman May 18, 1642; and died in 1663, his will being dated 24 : 11 : 1662, and proved 3 : 5 mo. 1663. Children: 1. Hannah[2], married Isaac Burnap 8 : 9 mo : 1658. 2. Obadiah[2], baptized June 7, 1640; married Martha Baker of Ipswich; lived in Salem; mariner; and was lost at sea on a voyage to Nevis or some other West India island in 1664. He called Edmund Batter "uncle." His widow returned to Ipswich; and married, secondly, Thomas Andrews of Rowley Village (Boxford) June 22, 1670. 3. Mary[2], baptized July 16, 1643; probably died before 1663. 4. John,[2] baptized March 29, 1646; probably died before 1663.—Salem town records, Registry of deeds, Savage, etc.

ANSWERS.

95. Elizabeth, wife of Gershom Hills, was daughter of John and Joan Chadwick, of Watertown and Malden, having been born in the latter place in 1648. Her brother John, who married Mary Barlow, was born in Malden in 1651, according to the inscription on his tombstone given in The Antiquarian, viz., "died Sept. ye 2d, 1707 in ye 56th year of his age." John, born in 1651, was not yet married to Mary Barlow in 1667, as stated by a correspondent, volume III., page 16.—Anna Hazelton, Milwaukee, Wis.

323. William Bradford of Middleton, Mass., who married Mary Lambert Jan. 18, 1737, was son of William Bradford and his wife Grace Elliot, and was born in Beverly, Mass., April 25, 1715. William Bradford, the father, was a seaman, and removed from Beverly to Boxford in 1720, and subsequently to Middleton, where he died in 1760 or 1761. He married Grace Elliot in Beverly Dec. 23, 1707, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Thomas Blowers.—Ed.

VOL. V. SALEM, MASS., JUNE, 1901. NO. 6.

BAILEY-BAYLEY GENEALOGY.

THE name of BAILEY is also spelled in the early Essex county records Baily, Bale, Baley, Balie, Balley, Ballie, Bally, Bayley, Baylies, Bayly, Baylye, and Baylyes. The two common spellings of the name are Bailey and Bayley, and one was as often used as the other.

There have been three large families of Baileys in this county, their ancestral immigrants being John Bailey of Salisbury and James and Richard Bailey of Rowley, the latter two being brothers. John's descendants will constitute an article by itself, but the others will be treated together in this article.

Neither the father nor mother of James and Richard are known:—

2—I. JAMES[2], b. about 1612. See below (2).
3—II. RICHARD[2], b. about 1619. See below (3).

JAMES BAILEY[2], born about 1612, was living in Rowley as early as 1641, and had land laid out to him soon after. He married Lydia ——; and died in Rowley Aug. —, 1677, being buried on the 10th. His estate was appraised at £586. His wife survived him, and died, his widow, in Rowley. Her death is recorded on the church records in the following words: "The widow aged good Sister Bayly, Alass! died April 29, 1704."

Children, born in Rowley:—*

4—I. JOHN[3], b. 12 mo: 2: 1642. See below (4).
5—II. LYDIA[3], b. 9 mo: — : 1644; m. Abel Platts May 8, 1672; and was living in 1677.
6—III. JONATHAN[3], b. Sept. —, 1646; buried March 27, 1665.
7—IV. DAMARIS[3], b. 11: 17: 1648; m. Thomas Leaver, jr., May 8, 1672; and was living in 1677.
8—V. JAMES[3], b. 11: 15: 1650. See below (8).
9—VI. THOMAS[3], b. 6 mo: 1: 1653; probably d. before 1677.
10—VII. SAMUEL[3], b. 6 mo: 10: 1655; buried Nov. 28, 1657.
11—VIII. SAMUEL[3], b. Nov. 6, 1658; probably d. before 1677.

*In 1669 he agreed to bring up as a father Priscilla, daughter of William Law of Rowley, deceased.

RICHARD BAILEY[2], born about 1619, is said to have come from Yorkshire, England, between 1630 and 1635, at the age of fifteen; and from Southampton, in the ship Bevis, Robert Batten, master, according to Savage, in 1638, in the service of Richard Dummer, being first at Lynn. He settled in Rowley, and was a man of recognized piety. His wife was Ednah Holstead. Mr. Bailey died at Rowley Feb. —, 1647-8, being buried on the 16th.* She survived him, and married, secondly, Ezekiel Northend of Rowley in 1649.

Child:—

12—I. JOSEPH[3]. See below (12).

JOHN BAILEY[3], born in Rowley 12 mo: 2: 1642. He lived with Mr. John Todd in Rowley in 1666; married Mary Mighill of Rowley June 17, 1668; and was made a freeman the next year. He died in the Expedition to Canada, on the return home, Nov. 19, 1690. She survived him, and died, his widow, between May 10, 1693, and March 27, 1694.

*His will was published in The Antiquarian, volume III, page 90.

THE INDIAN.

I venerate the Pilgrim's cause,
Yet for the Red man dare to plead;
We bow to Heaven's recorded laws,
He turned to nature for a creed.

PASSACONAWAY.

Passaconaway was the great sachem of the country upon the Merrimack river and, at this distant day, it is impossible to fix the bounds of his dominions. Nashua and Pennacook were included therein, although there might have been many subordinate sagamores within the same limits. There was, in Philip's war, a sagamore Sam, of Nashua, and many others might be named in different parts.

Passaconaway "lived to a very great age, for," says a manuscript, "I saw him alive at Pawtucket, when he was about a hundred and twenty years old."* Before his death he delivered the following speech to his children and friends: "I am now going the way of all flesh, or ready to die, and not likely to see you ever meet together any more. I will now leave this word of counsel with you, that you may take heed how you quarrel with the English, for though you may do them much mischief, yet as surely you will all be destroyed and rooted off the earth if you do; for, said he, I was as much an enemy to the English, at their first coming into these parts, as any one whatsoever, and did try all ways and means possible to have destroyed them, at least to have prevented them from settling down here, but I could not effect it; therefore, I advise you never to contend with the English, nor make war with them." And Mr. Hubbard adds, "It is to be noted that this Passaconaway was the most noted powow and sorcerer of all the country."

His eldest son, Wonnalansit, succeeded him in authority, upon his decease, about the year 1660. He was also a friend of the English, and when he could live no longer in their neighborhood without endangering the peace of his people, in the time of Philip's war, he retired with them far into the wilderness toward Canada. Captain Mosely was sent up to his place of residence, a little before he abandoned it, with one hundred armed men, who laid waste his wigwams and winter's provisions, and yet was suffered to march off unmolested, although Mosely's men passed sufficiently near Wonnalansit's warriors, who had secreted themselves, to have been nearly all cut off by them; but the old chief would not suffer them to fire, although he restrained them with difficulty. Like Massasoit and Powhaton, he had many places of residence; one of the principal ones being Naamkok, since called Amoskeag.*

A story of the marriage of a daughter of Passaconaway, in 1662, is thus related. Manataqua, sachem of Saugus, made known his wishes to the chief of Pennacook, that he desired to marry his daughter, which being agreeable to all parties, was soon consummated at the residence of Passaconaway, and the hilarity was closed with a great feast. According to the usages of the chiefs, Passaconaway ordered a select number of his men to accompany the newly married couple to the dwelling of the husband. When they had arrived there, several days of feasting followed, for the entertainment of his friends, who could not be present at the consummation at the bride's father's, as well as for the escort; who, when this was ended, returned to Pennacook.

Some time after, the wife of Manataqua expressed a desire to visit her father's house and friends, and was permitted to go, a choice company conducting her. When she wished to return to her husband, her father, instead of conveying her as before, sent for the young sachem to come and take her away. He took this in high dudgeon, and sent his father-in-law this answer: "When she departed from me I caused my men to escort her to your dwelling, as became a chief. She now having an intention to return to me, I did expect the same." The elder sachem was now in his turn angry, and returned an answer which only increased the difference; and it is believed that this terminated the connection of the new husband and wife.*

Benjamin F. Ayer of Chicago writes: "About thirty years ago I had some correspondence with a gentleman in Boston, long since deceased, of the name of Melvin Lord, who was a descendant, I believe, of the original settler John Ayer, who came to Massachusetts in 1637. He had made pretty extensive researches into the history of the family in this country; and he wrote that John Ayer, born 1592, died 1657, came to America from England in 1637 in ship Mary Ann, Captain Goose. He came at first alone, and was followed by his family. In 1642 he is found at Salisbury; after that, in 1645, at Haverhill. His name was registered in England in the official list of emigrants on his leaving for this country, as John Eyre, grocer, of Norwich."—Charles M. Ayer, Grand Rapids, Mich.

From the following paper, found in the Essex court files, it appears that the eldest child of Corp. John Andrews of Lynn (see Antiquarian, volume IV, page 157) was Sarah:—"The testimony of Daniel Epes & Eliezer Kesar being of full age do testifie and say that Sarah Cannon widow now living at Boston, formerly called Sarah Andrews, is ye reputed eldest daughter of Corpor^ll John Andrews* of Lynn deceased. 30th December 1701."

VOL. V. SALEM, MASS., JULY, AUGUST, SEPTEMBER, 1901. NOS. 7, 8, 9.

TOPSFIELD IN 1800.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

ON page 99 is given a map of the village of Topsfield as it was in 1800. It is based on actual surveys and title deeds, and is drawn on a scale of forty-five rods or seven hundred and fifty feet to an inch. It shows the location of all houses that were standing within the territory included in the map in 1800.

The main street was a highway probably before 1668, as, March 16, 1668-9, Haverhill street (from "Todd's corner") was laid out "from Topſfield meeting houſe, along vnder the North East Syde of the Hill called bare Hill, along as the trees are marked, over the brooke by Ephraim Dormans Houſe, and so along the plaine, called the Pine plaine, trees being marked, the end of Baker's Pond, and over the brooke at the pond end, by William Pritchetts houſe as the trees are marked, vnto the high way y^t comes betweene Andover and Ipſwich and so along that High way."* In 1669, also, was laid out the Boxford road from Endecott's farm on the north side of Ipswich river in Boxford, past Kinsman's corner, on the north side of the common, over the older road to the meeting house in the burying ground.† Until 1663, the meeting house stood near the "dry bridge," and the old road in the rear of the Methodist church was the way to it from this neighborhood and Boxford.

In the sketches that follow, titles and deeds referred to pertain to the houses and land under and adjoining them, and not always to the whole lot, the design being to give the history of the houses standing in 1800 principally.

The Burying Ground. This burying ground is quite old, though the oldest stone remaining there, which bears an intelligible date, is marked "1717." In 1663, the meeting house was removed from the spot it had occupied for a number of years, near the "dry bridge," into the southeastern corner of this burial place, which was then very small. It may be that the opening of the cemetery dates from the time the meeting house was removed thither, the English custom of intering the dead around the church being followed.

In 1672, the Villagers (the Boxford settlers) built a sabbath-day house and a stable; and the next year, as a precaution against the Indians, a stone wall, five or six feet high and three feet broad at the bottom, was built around the meeting house. On the south side the wall was twelve feet, and on the other three sides ten feet from the building. Within this wall, at the southeast corner, a watch-house, ten feet square, was built, and this was called, in the beginning of the eighteenth century, the "Old meeting house fort."

This old meeting house stood here until 1703, when a new one was built on the site of the present Congregational church on the common, and the old one was sold for five pounds to John Gould, who moved it down to the turnpike, using it for a barn.

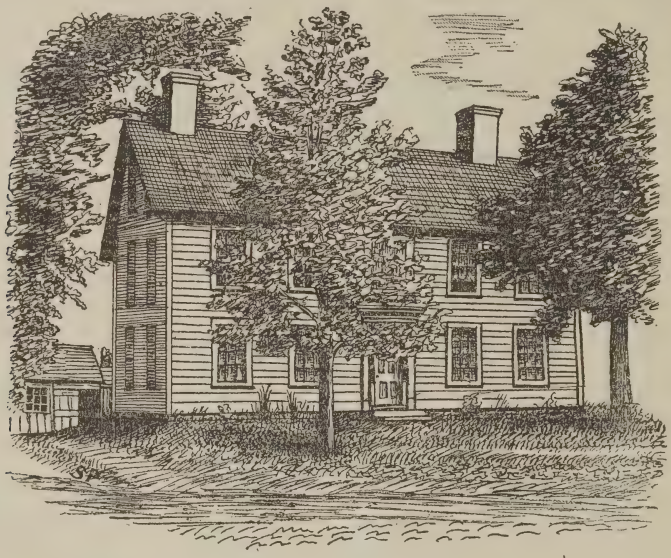
Dr. John Merriam House. Thomas Foster of Topsfield conveyed this field of twelve and a half acres to Dr. John Merriam of Top field Feb. 11, 1796;* and upon it the purchaser immediately erected the house now standing there, and shown in the accompanying cut. The estate passed to the ownership of Dr. Royal A. Merriam, who conveyed the house and lot, Feb. 14, 1856, to Samuel Todd,* who owned the place until his death.



DR. JOHN MERRIAM HOUSE.

Daniel Perkins House. Daniel Hood of Topsfield, housewright, perhaps owned a half interest in this lot, and the large lot of Dr. John Merriam adjoining, June 1, 1778, when he bought a half interest in the same of Oliver Perkins of Topsfield, yeoman, for one hundred pounds.* Mr. Hood erected the house now known as the Conant house, and shown in the accompanying engraving, immediately following his purchase. He occupied the house and land until March 31, 1784, when he sold the estate to Dr. John Merriam of Topsfield.†

Dr. Merriam conveyed the house and little lot on which it stood to Daniel Perkins of Salem, mariner, Oct. 9, 1797,‡ and removed to his new house across the street. Mr. Perkins died in 1800, returning from Batavia, on the Franklin, of which he was second-mate. He was a native of Topsfield; and had for many years dispensed liquors at the Sun Tavern in Salem. He was probably unmarried, as he devised this house and lot to his sisters Hannah and Peggy Perkins of Topsfield. They conveyed the house and lot to Aaron Conant of Topsfield, trader, June 18, 1806;§ and the estate still belongs to his family, a son being the present owner.

Simon Bradstreet Lot. This lot belonged to Simon Bradstreet of Topsfield, laborer, in 1778. There was a small house upon it that he had bought of Stephen Waters before 1784. May 7, 1787, Mr. Bradstreet conveyed the house to Thomas Emerson of Topsfield, gentleman.‖ Mr. Emerson probably removed the house to his land across the street, the present Andrews house being the house perhaps. The house probably continued in the possession of Mr. Emerson until his death in 1813. His estate was sued by Sarah Ann Emerson of Danvers, singlewoman, and this small house and the land around it was assigned to her in satisfaction of her execution Aug. 31, 1832.* She conveyed the house and land to Nehemiah Cleaveland, esq., and Moses Wildes, gentleman, both of Topsfield, Aug. 20, 1833.† Upon the death of Thomas Emerson in 1813, under his will this house and land descended to his son Billy Emerson. Billy mortgaged it in 1830 to Messrs. Cleaveland and Wildes,‡ and, March 21, 1834, they sold it to John Emerson of Norwich, Vt.§ June 2, 1835, John Emerson conveyed the house and land to Gilbert Brownell of Boston, merchant.‖ In 1843, Messrs. Cleaveland and Wildes released the premises to Mr. Brownell.¶ The house was known as the Falls house June 20, 1850, when Mr. Brownell conveyed it with a small lot of land to Elisha P. Andrews of Topsfield, in whose family the title has since been.

Thomas Emerson House. The proprietors of the common lands in Topsfield, for fourteen pounds, conveyed the southern end of this lot (two acres and twenty rods) to Rev. John Emerson of Topsfield March 7, 1733.†† Mr. Emerson died in 1774, having devised the mansion house to his son Thomas Emerson. Thomas died in 1813, having devised it to his son Billy Emerson. Billy erected the present house, three stories in height, retaining the old house as a wing two stories high. Billy mortgaged it in 1830,‡ and Mehitable Emerson, widow of Thomas Emerson, to whom it had been assigned, conveyed the estate to Gilbert Brownell June 5, 1835.‡‡ The house was occupied by Billy Emerson as long as he lived. He died Nov. 2, 1835. Mr. Brownell conveyed the estate to Humphrey Balch of Topsfield, gentleman, July 9, 1852;§§ and it has remained in the possession of Mr. Balch and his family ever since.

Capen House. This house was built on land granted by the town to Rev. Joseph Capen, and laid out to him Feb. 28, 1682-3. The lot contained twelve acres; and the house was probably built soon afterward. Here Mr. Capen subsequently lived. He died July 30, 1725, and the house and land descended to his children, becoming the property of his son Nathaniel, who conveyed the "old house" and land around it to John Baker of Boxford, yeoman, March 17, 1746.* Mr. Baker conveyed the estate to Edmund Putnam of Danvers Feb. 24, 1753.† Mr. Putnam came here and lived until he conveyed the house and lot to Rev. John Emerson of Topsfield May 10, 1758.‡ Mr. Emerson died in 1774; and in his will devised his real estate to his son Thomas Emerson, who died in 1813, having devised this estate to his son Joseph Emerson. He says in his will, which was made nearly two years before he died, "I am preparing to build a house and barn on this lot for my said son Joseph." Joseph Emerson died June 17, 1826, and the estate descended to his daughter, Harriet J., who became the wife of the late Charles H. Holmes, esq., in whose family and estate the title has since remained. A view of the ancient house is given in the frontispiece.

Averill House. This house stood some distance north of the residence of the late Charles H. Holmes. The site was a part of the homestead of Rev. Joseph Capen, and was conveyed by his son Nathaniel Capen of Topsfield, joiner, to Nathaniel Moulton of Ipswich, cordwainer, Sept. 27, 1737.§ He probably built the house that afterwards stood there the next year; and, Oct. 31, 1741, when he was of Andover, he conveyed the land and buildings to Francis Simons of Topsfield, weaver.* Mr. Simons conveyed the house and lot to Nathaniel Fuller, jr., of Ipswich, tailor, March 3, 1741-2.† Mr. Fuller removed to Groton, and sold the estate to Ruth Somes, widow of Ebenezer Somes, late of Gloucester, then of Topsfield, Dec. 9, 1743.‡ Isaac Fitts married Mrs. Somes, and lived in Danvers. June 3, 1752, they conveyed the house and lot to Jacob Averill, jr., of Topsfield, joiner.§ The place remained in the Averill family until about 1805, when it was conveyed to Thomas Emerson, who probably took the house down about 1812.

1843, when the present one was completed. The old one was carried to Salem, and has done useful service as a tannery on Boston street for fifty years.

School House. The school house, in which was kept the Middle school in 1800, stood where the town hall stands. It was built in 1790 or 1791, and was used as a school house until 1867, when the academy building came into the use of the public schools.

Jacob Kimball House. Rev. John Emerson sold this lot to Isaac Fitts in 1749; and the latter's widow, Ruth Fitts of

JACOB KIMBALL HOUSE.

The Common. This was the training field of the early days, and is mentioned as such from 1731 to 1811.

The Meeting House. The first meeting house to occupy this site was erected in 1703. This was a small hill, which was then cut down to make it convenient for the location of the meeting house, which was forty-four feet long and forty-two wide. The pulpit and some of the timbers of the old meeting house were used in the construction of the new. In 1760, it was superseded by another on the same site. This also passed away in

Danvers, conveyed it to Jacob Kimball, jr., blacksmith, Oct. 28, 1755.* Mr. Kimball built the present house thereon. May 12, 1803, he conveyed one-half of the house and lot to his son Benjamin Kimball, of Topsfield, blacksmith;† and Benjamin conveyed it to Moses Wildes, jr., of Topsfield, blacksmith, March 5, 1808.‡ The father died in 1812; and his son Jacob Kimball, esq., conveyed the remaining half-interest to Mr. Wildes April 3, 1813.§ The place has remained in the Wildes family ever since. The son Jacob Kimball, born in this house in 1761, graduated at Harvard college in 1780. He practised law at Amherst, N. H., and was noted as a composer of music, being the author of the "Rural Harmony," published in 1793. The blacksmith's shop of the Kimballs and Wildes stood on the opposite side of the road from the house. The house is shown in the accompanying engraving.

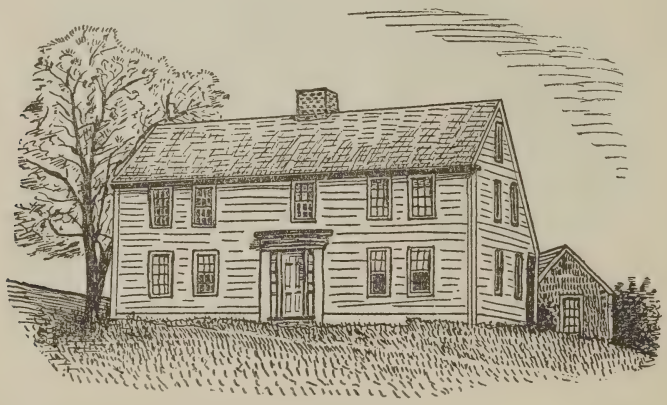
Samuel Hood House. This was the site of the tavern of Daniel and Dan Clark, and probably the same house that had stood here more than a century. It was the property of Daniel Clark in 1698, of Dan Clark in 1755, and of Daniel Clark in 1765. Daniel Clark of Topsfield, gentleman, conveyed the estate to Thomas Porter of Topsfield, gentleman, April 10, 1781;* and removed to the West Parish of Rowley (now the town of Georgetown), living where the late residence of T. G. Elliot stands. Mr. Porter conveyed the place to Rev. Daniel Breck, then pastor of the church here, May 10, 1781.† Mr. Breck conveyed the house and lot to Samuel Hood of Topsfield, housewright, May 3, 1786.‡ Mr. Hood lived here, and conveyed the house, barn and land to John Rea, 3d, of Topsfield, trader, May 2, 1821.* Mr. Rea conducted a tavern here until the buildings were entirely burned by an incendiary on the night of Oct. 16, 1836.

Thomas Perkins House. This was the house of Zaccheus Perkins in 1713, and became his son Thomas Perkins' before 1731. The latter was a blacksmith, and died in 1786, having devised his real estate to his son Thomas, who was also a blacksmith. Thomas conveyed this house and lot to Samuel Hood of Topsfield, housewright, July 2, 1810.† Mr. Hood sold the buildings and land to Edmund Parker of Topsfield and John H. Lerned of Cambridge Aug. 27, 1810;‡ and they conveyed the same to William Hubbard and Zaccheus Gould, jr., of Topsfield April 13, 1812.§ Mr. Hubbard retained title to the estate until a few years ago. A picture of the house appears above.



THOMAS PERKINS HOUSE.

John Baker (Cellar) Lot. Zaccheus Perkins of Topsfield, yeoman, conveyed this lot to Thomas Goodale of Topsfield, joiner, Nov. 22, 1713.‖ Mr. Goodale mortgaged it, with a house thereon, in 1718.¶ Administration on his estate was granted to his widow Phebe Goodale Nov. 7, 1720. In the inventory of his estate his land and buildings were subject to a mortgage. The mortgage executed in 1718 was discharged in 1721; and the house, standing in 1724, was gone before 1761. Perhaps this house was removed to the John Baker lot north, to be the ell of the J. Porter Gould house about 1800.

Nehemiah Cleaveland House. This house was probably the same that Jacob Robinson of Topsfield died possessed of in 1730. It was next owned by his son Jacob Robinson, who conveyed the estate to Elijah Porter of Topsfield March 28, 1761.* Mr. Porter became involved, and the estate passed into the hands of Nehemiah Cleaveland about 1795. He took down the old house many years after, and in its place erected the present house, which is now the Children's Home.

David Balch House. This lot was apparently a part of the estate of Jacob Robinson of Topsfield, who died in 1730. In the inventory of his estate is mentioned "timber for a dwelling house and about eleven hundred of slit work and eight or nine hundred of pine board." These were probably the materials of which this house was constructed soon after Mr. Robinson's death by his son John, to whom this lot had been released by the heirs. John Robinson lived in Topsfield, being a husbandman, and conveyed this estate to David Balch of Topsfield, yeoman, April 26, 1734.† He removed to Nottingham-west, N. H. Mr. Balch died in 1769, having devised the estate to his son David. David Balch, jr., was a tanner, and died in 1787, having devised his real estate to his sons David, Thomas and Joshua. The tanyard was across the road. The estate came into the hands of David, who died in 1812, and from him its title descended to his son Abraham, who lived upon it and died possessed of it a few years ago. The house has since been transformed into a barn. The house was one of the ancient leanto houses, similar in design to the Thomas Perkins house shown above.

JEFFREY ESTE.

Jeffrey Este was in Salem as early as 1636, and left there about 1651, settling in Long Island. The following copy of his will (copied from the town records of Huntington, Suffolk county, Long Island, volume I, page 7, by Orville B. Ackerly of New York City) proves that Isaac Estey of Topsfield, whom wife Mary (Towne) Esty suffered for witchcraft at Salem, Sept. 22, 1692, was his son. It seems that Catherine was the name of the daughter that married Henry Scudder of Huntington.

"Jefery Este desceased the 4th of January 57 haveing mad his will and desposed of his estat as follueth: 1 he gave to his son Isak Easte sholled have A bedd and all that thar unto belonging. 2 20 shillings in shewes of if henry skodar so can to his dafter. 3 he bequeathed his house and lote to Jonathn Skodar the son of henary Skodar and his father to be his gardenar till his son com the age of 21 yeres and the rest of his estat to henary skodar of huntington. I henary Skodar being exetar in the presunc of thes witneses the 23 of Jenuary 59 (7?)."

ANSWERS.

204. The church records of Georgetown (formerly the West parish of Rowley) give the following: William Searl was a founder of the church Oct. 4, 1732, and was chosen deacon Nov. 29, 1732. Jane Searl, daughter of Deacon Searl was baptized Nov. 1, 1741. Jane Searl, jr., was admitted March 21, 1741-2. Jane Searl, now wife of Dea. Jeremiah Jewett, dismissed to First church in Rowley Dec. 3, 1769. She died in Rowley July 18, 1815, aged eighty-eight.—Ed.

307. Abigail Johnson, daughter of Stephen Johnson, a farmer of North Andover, was baptized in West parish, Boxford, Feb. 25, 1759. Her mother was Mary ——. His will, dated March 8, 1802, was proved Nov. 10, 1814. Abigail married Tyler Porter of Boxford Dec. 23, 1779, and was living in 1815.—Ed.

330. The will of widow Grace Davis proves that she died in August or September, 1741. Her son James[4] Davis was probably the one who married March 29, 1716, Sarah[3] Bailey (Joseph[2], Richard[1]). The Haverhill records give the births and deaths of their sons Elisha[5] and Richard[5], 1718-1721, and the births of their daughters Ruth[5] and Sarah[5], 1720-1722; but there are manifest errors in the dates. Our notes give no mention of James[4] in his mother's will, but he is mentioned in his father's will, 1739.—David W. Hoyt, Providence, R. I.

PART OF SALEM IN 1700. NO. 7.

THE ESSEX ANTIQUARIAN.

VOL. V. SALEM, MASS., OCTOBER-DECEMBER, 1901. NOS. 10-12.

PART OF SALEM IN 1700. NO. 7.

BY SIDNEY PERLEY.

THE frontispiece is a map of that section of Salem which is bounded by Essex, Boston and Proctor streets and Norman's Rocks. It is based on actual surveys and title deeds, and is drawn on a scale of two hundred feet to an inch. It shows the location of all the houses that were standing in 1700. The braces marked "a" show where May street now runs.

Essex street was originally the lane to the brick kiln of Thomas Trusler, and was laid out in the earliest settlement of the town. This was also the way to the common pasture. It was first called a highway in 1730; highway to the great common pasture in 1736; way leading from Buffum's corner to the northerly great pasture gate, 1794; turnpike, 1824; and Essex street soon afterward.

Boston street was probably laid out at the time Town bridge was built in 1640. This was known as the west end of the town. The bridge was built by John Pickering in 1640, and five years later it had to be reconstructed. It was then raised, and a causeway, extending nearly two hundred feet, built. This street was called a street or lane, 1676; ye bridge street so called towards Trask's mills, 1680; the street going towards the mill bridge, 1681; highway, 1692; ye country road, 1737; way leading to the town bridge, 1765; the main street, 1773; Town bridge street, 1789; great road, 1789; street leading from Buffum's corner to Town bridge, 1789; and Boston street, 1799. The bridge or causeway was so long that land adjoining was described as bounded by the Town bridge in 1698, 1789, and other dates, nearly to Federal street.

May street was laid out by Benjamin Goodhue between 1794 and 1805. It was first called the new road, 1805; new street, 1810; and May street, 1814.

Proctor street is a part of the earliest road in Salem. It was called a way leading to the gallows' hill pasture in 1870; and for the last twenty years has been called Proctor street.

In the sketches that follow, after 1700, titles and deeds referred to pertain to the houses and land under and adjoining, but not always to the whole lot, the design being, after 1700, to give the history of the houses then standing principally.

William Bean House. This was a part of the lot of Robert Buffum, and was probably granted to him by the town. This corner piece was separated from the rest of the lot by the laying out of Boston street in 1640, or soon afterward. The land descended to his daughter Sarah, wife of William Bean, upon the death of Mr. Buffum in 1669. On this lot was a house, perhaps built by Mr. Bean, or removed thither before 1661. He died in 1715 possessed of the house, but of no land. The house is described in the inventory of Mr. Bean's estate as a small old house out of repair, and was valued at ten pounds. In 1730, it was still standing and possessed by the children, and a deed of adjoining land reserved a right of way from the street to the old house so long as it remained habitable and was inhabited. It was gone soon afterward. This was known as Bean's corner.

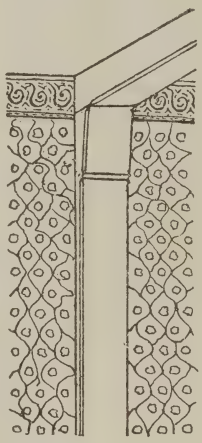
Edward Flint and Thomas Flint Lots ("Brickkiln Field"). These two lots constituted the brickkiln field, which was probably granted to Thomas Trusler in the first settlement of the town. Here he made bricks; and died possessed of the lot in 1653. His inventory, dated 5 : 1 mo : 1653-4, mentions three acres of marsh and upland where the brickkiln is. His heirs and executors, Henry, Nicholas, and Edward Phelps, conveyed it to William Flint of Salem, yeoman, 4 : 9 mo : 1656.* Mr. Flint died in 1673, having devised the lot to his two sons Edward and Thomas. They made a division, Dec. 3, 1694,† as shown on the map. Edward Flint died possessed of his part in 1711, and Thomas in 1719.

Joshua Buffum and Caleb Buffum Lots. These lots were a part of a lot originally belonging, and probably granted, to John Alderman of Salem. Mr. Alderman died in 1657, having devised this land and also the lot of Nicholas Chattwell, to Ezra Clapp and Nathaniel Clapp. They conveyed it to Giles Coree of Salem, husbandman, July 24, 1663.‡ Mr. Coree conveyed it to Edward Flint, who owned adjoining land, before 1676, but the deed was given Feb. 8, 1681-2.§ The exact lines of this lot of "one acre," as it was called, against the land of the Flints cannot be determined, as it became one lot upon the division between the Flints in 1694. Edward Flint conveyed these lots of Joshua and Caleb Buffum to the widow Gertrude Pope of Salem March 24, 1676-7.‖ She conveyed them to her sons-in-law Joshua Buffum and Caleb Buffum, both yeomen, and living directly across the street, Joshua to have the northwesterly half and Caleb the southeasterly, June 6, 1684¶. They owned the lots until after 1700.

Nicholas Chattwell House. This was a part of the lot conveyed by Giles Coree to Edward Flint before 1676, as above. That part of this lot lying southeasterly and northeasterly of the dashes was sold by Mr. Flint to John Maccarter of Salem, dyer, before 1677, but the deed was given May 28, 1682.* Mr. Maccarter built the house now standing upon the lot, and numbered 19, before October, 1685. The ancient house is in good condition, and among its evidences of age are the posts that support the summer beam of the fore-room. From floor to beam the distance was six feet and one inch. About three inches, one-half its thickness, has been hewn from the beam in later times.



This post, with its ornamented shoulder, is shown herewith. Within sight of his windows and only two hundred yards away successively occurred the hanging of the alleged witches in June, July, August and September, 1692; and a large number were in the jails awaiting execution. What, if any, was the effect of these executions upon the minds of Mr. Maccarter and his family is not known; but Nov. 12, of the same year, he conveyed the house and lot, apparently for a price far below their worth, to Nicholas Chattwell of Salem, mariner.† Mr. Flint conveyed to Mr. Chattwell the remainder of the lot April 26, 1695.‡ Mr. Chattwell died Oct. 30, 1700, and, after the death of his wife in 1718, the estate descended to his only surviving child, Priscilla, wife of John Meacham of Enfield, yeoman, who conveyed the house and lot to Thorndike Proctor of Salem, husbandman, June 11, 1724.§ On the death of Mr. Proctor, the estate descended to his son Ebenezer, and upon the latter's decease, to his only child, Sarah, wife of Samuel Merritt. Upon Mrs. Merritt's death, her heirs released the house and lot to her son-in-law, Nathaniel Woodbury, March 4, 1799.* Upon his decease, the estate descended to his children, who conveyed it to Nathaniel and Ebenezer Tuttle April 19, 1836.† It has been in the possession of Nathaniel Tuttle and his family ever since. The engraving above shows the house as it now appears.

John and Rebecca Bickford Lot. This was the lot of Lawrence Southwick in 1656; and he sold it to Thomas Robbins before 1681. Both parties died; and, no deed "appearing of record," Mr. Southwick's executors gave a deed of it, including the "pond or salt marsh," to William Pinson, whose wife Rebecca was Mr. Robbins' niece and heir, in 1694.

Mr. Pinson took possession of a strip of the common land between the pond and the old road, as shown on the map, and the town subsequently sold it to him, by vote of the selectmen, March 6, 1693-4.

Mr. Pinson died in July, 1695, possessed of the entire lot "at the bridge pond with the frame of a house standing on it." He devised one-third of the estate to his wife Rebecca, and two-thirds to his only heir, his young daughter Rebecca. The widow married, secondly, Joseph Boobier of Marblehead, and she and her husband released to her daughter Rebecca and her husband John Bickford of Marblehead, "all that ye pasture or parcel of mowing land consisting of upland marsh and thatch banks and pond," containing three acres, Jan. 11, 1698.* The Bickfords owned the premises until they removed to Reading about 1750. The pond was filled about a hundred years ago.

Place of Execution and Burial of the Alleged Witches. In 1692, to the southeast and southwest of the lot of the Bickfords and the pond was common land, through which the highway had run from the first settlement of the town. The plan shows the places where the evidence indicates that the alleged witches were executed and buried.

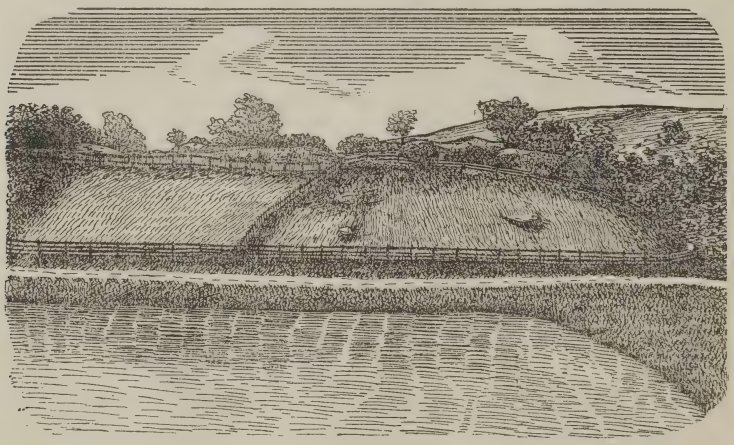
John Adams, who often visited Salem, stopping with his "brother Cranch," who lived on what is now Mill street, wrote in his diary under date of Thursday, Aug. 14, 1766: "Dined at Cranch's; after dinner walked to Witchcraft hill, a hill about half a mile from Cranch's, where the famous persons formerly executed for witches were buried. Somebody within a few years has planted a number of locust trees over the graves, as a memorial of that memorable victory over the 'prince of the power of the air.' This hill is in a large common belonging to the proprietors of Salem, etc. From it you have a fair view of the town, of the river, the north and south fields, of Marblehead, of Judge Lynde's pleasure-house, etc., of Salem village, etc." He may have walked to the highest part of the hill, though his description would probably have been as applicable to the lower hill marked on the map. Some things that he omits to mention, as the harbor, indicate that he ascended the lower hill only.

The drawing of the hill presented herewith, is as it now appears, without the buildings, as none were there in 1692, and with the pond and ancient road as at that time. The point of view is from the northeast, at No. 51 Boston street. The fence at the road may have been there in 1692. The fences running over the hill were not there at that time, but are now. The lot between the road and the fence running parallel to it belonged to Moses Stewart, and was sold to Thorndike Proctor. Mr. Proctor died in 1773, and, in 1775, this lot was assigned to his widow as a part of her dower. It is described as the lot "on which the locust trees now stand." In the deed to Stewart, in 1737, no trees are mentioned, and without question these are the ones of which Mr. Adams wrote. The fact that the lot is thus described shows that the locust trees were a distinguishing mark. Elderly men now living remember the great locust trees on this lot in their early boyhood. The trees stood near the fence on the southeasterly end of the lot near the shrubbery shown at the left in the drawing.



PROBABLE SITE OF EXECUTION AND GRAVES OF THE "WITCHES."

A man who now lives on the lot states that he dug up two great stumps there some forty years ago. He pointed out their exact location, and the spots are indicated on the map by x's. One of them was in a crevice in the ledge, now somewhat hidden by the shrubbery. Calef wrote that Mr. Burroughs' remains were dragged by a halter to a hole, or grave, between the rocks, about two feet deep, and buried there with Willard and Carrier; that one of his hands, and his chin, and a foot of one of them, were left uncovered. There is a tradition that Caleb Buffum saw the projecting remains, and after dark went to the spot and covered them, subsequently assisting in taking some of the bodies down the hill to the water, from whence they were transported in boats to their various homesteads. Probably the bodies of George Jacobs, Rebecca Nurse and others were taken away in this manner. Caleb Buffum lived on what is now Boston street opposite his lot shown on the map, within view of the burial places, and only two hundred and fifty yards away. John Maccarter's house was fifty yards nearer, and, knowing the circumstances, the immediate disposal of his homestead is readily explained.

Upham cites, as evidence that Gallows' hill is the place where the executions took place, the statement of John Symonds, who was born in the summer of 1692, that the nurse at his birth saw from the windows of his birth-house the victims as they hung. But whether or not the designated house is the old Symonds' house on North street or one near Beverly bridge is not stated. It is not important, however, as at that date from either place the smaller and nearer hill was visible, and the range is such that, as shown in the picture the top of this hill is outlined against the sky as well as that of the greater hill.

No way was ever known until recently by which a cart could ascend the greater hill, whereas the lower hill was by the side of the first highway in the town.

If the locust trees mark the site of the graves, the place of the executions was near, as Calef states that the body of Mr. Burroughs was dragged by a halter to his grave. This little eminence is about sixty feet high, and must have had a broad and beautiful prospect spread out before it when the river was a thousand feet wide, and the great factories and other constructions did not exist.

LOST AT SEA.

BY JAMES J. H. GREGORY.

When mid our graveyard mounds I tread,
Reading what loving hearts have said,
In words that breathe above the dead,
It thrills and chills me like a moan
Heard from the old sepulchral stone,—
That one short sentence, told to me
By mourning marble, "Lost at Sea."

Surely never from lips of men,
Nor when the truth-recording pen
Proclaimed the worst that men condemn,
Fell sadder words than these to me,—
That wail of sorrow—"Lost at Sea!"
An echo from an unknown shore,
From whence our loved return no more.

In the lone vastness of the deep,
Far down beneath the waves, they sleep,—
The loved ones we so mourn and weep.
They bravely fought the cruel gale,
Till strength and skill could not avail,
And pitying ocean took them home
To depths of calm, where no storms come.

There's scarce a Bible in our town,
But scan its generations down,
And on its pages, old and brown,
At least one record you shall see
Of some much-mourned one lost at sea;
It tells the day he sailed away,—
And that was all there was to say.

Let him who walks our narrow streets,
Whose little homes the stranger greets,
As at each turn he often meets
Their queer array; think of mothers,
Sweethearts, fathers, sisters, brothers,
Who months and years did watch in vain
To greet the loved that never came.

Pale-faced they scanned the mighty deep,
Their weeping eyes refused to sleep;
'Twixt hope and fear their pulses beat,
And kindly neighbors climbed the stair,
Praying the long-lost one was there;
Till hope wrote, with despairing moan,
That death line on the cold gravestone,—
"Lost at Sea."

Marblehead.

BAKER GENEALOGY.

The principal family of Bakers in Essex county is that which originated in this country with JOHN BAKER[1] of Ipswich. He was born in 1598, and April 9, 1616, was apprenticed to a grocer in Norwich, England, for twelve years, to learn that business. In 1628 he was a citizen of Norwich, and engaged as a grocer. He married Elizabeth ———, who was born about 1606, and in 1637 came to New England, intending to settle in Charlestown, but came to Ipswich instead. In 1638 he possessed a house lot on High street, in Ipswich, and was made a freeman June 2, 1641. He was a man of prominence and property, and was licensed to sell wine in 1644 and 1647, and beer in 1652, being an innholder in 1664, 1665 and 1666. He bought an extensive tract of land in Topsfield, and removed thither between 1670 and 1678, being of Topsfield in 1680. He died in 168—. His wife Elizabeth was living in 1666. Mr. Baker conveyed his hundred-and-fifty acre farm and buildings in Topsfield, bounded on Baker's (now called Hood's) pond, to his son Thomas in 1661.

Richard Baker wrote from Norwich, England, March 2, 1676, ordering his cousin Mr. John Baker to pay some money to John's brother, Benjamin Baker. No Benjamin Baker appears here in those early days, and this Benjamin was probably a brother who was here on a visit.
